

Combined preparation, comprising as an active ingredient at least one anti-infectiously active compound, that inhibits the 2-C-methylerythrose-4-metabolic pathway, and at least one lipid metabolism inhibitor. The combined preparation is used in infectious processes especially in infections in humans and animals and as a herbicide in plants. It is shown that the built-up of resistance against the inventive combined preparation is largely reduced compared to the individual components.